avani, Mummie, there wouldn't be any, halfway late and we should
oms. Oh, do let us go in a caravan." Mrs. Russell shook her head. "I know it sounds lovely, darling, we to get a caravan? It would cost at least £200 to buy one, and even en if we had one, Daddy couldn't get away with it in summer. No ake up our minds to do without a holiday this year; but I'll tell you ll do: we'll all go to Southend for the day, as we did last year, for r lunch and tea with us and have a splendid picnic."
"Then we can bathe again," said Bob; "but, oh! I do wish I could ny and ride," he added unexpectedly. "You don't know how I ny," he continued, sighing deeply as he remembered the blissful hen a friend let him share his little Dartmoor pony and ride occas "Southend is nothing but houses and people," cried Phyllis; "it's
